FOIL VACUUM POUCHES

THERMOFORM

Product Information

Thermoforming films can offer a cost-effective way to package various products. Thermoformer machines are automatic horizontal packaging machines that form packs using a top and bottom roll of film. During operation, the bottom film is shaped, forming a pocket or pack. Product is then placed in the pack utilizing the available loading area. The packs, now laden with product, advance to a sealing station where vacuum is drawn to remove the air and, if necessary, add gas for modified atmosphere (MAP). The top film seals a lid over the packs and the individual packs are separated as part of the process. This packing option can be a great cost saver for a growing business that needs to keep up with demand and growth without impacting shelf life.

Features

- Shelf-life extension
- Both high and medium barriers are available to extend the shelf-life of your product whilst maintaining the quality.
- Depending on your machinery and application, various structures, sizes and roll lengths can be produced to suit your specific needs.

Harvest B formulates solutions for alternative meat systems. Our protein library provides the foundational building blocks for your plant based meat solutions.

Leveraging our deep understanding of novel proteins, process engineering and culinary creativity, Harvest B celebrates the plant to create superior products that enable you to do more, with less.

Starting with Australian Wheat as our protein base, Harvest B has started to expand into new proteins and blends to achieve nutritional and flavour requirements for a broad range of product applications.

Sold as cartons of 10

DMD Seasoning

As a guide, add 440g seasoning to 13kg water and mix to dissolve. Add to 7kg protein, rehydrate for atleast 12 hours before draining the liquid.

HARVEST B

Plant Based Protein

Over the past century, our global food system has experienced more change than agriculture did since it first began to be practiced nearly 13,000 years ago. Recent transformations produced incredible efficiencies, increased production and lowered the costs to feed a global population that grew by five billion people over this time.

As it scaled, this food system stopped being designed to feed humans. Through broadacre cropping and corporate farming, the food system became optimised to feed livestock and satisfy our insatiable demand for animal protein. Unfortunately, animals are an inefficient protein delivery system where only about one kilogram of meat results from 10 kilograms of feed.

This inefficient system means we now have a whopping 45% of all our planet's land devoted to supporting livestock production. This system is increasingly strangling all forms of life on our planet, from biodiversity loss to our overall climate. And by 2050, we will have another two billion mouths to feed with a rising middle class demanding more protein than ever before.

What got us here, won't get us there. It's time for us to pursue a Plan B with purpose and urgency to develop a more efficient, scalable and planet-friendly food system designed to feed humans-first. Whether at the field or the fork, our team at Harvest B looks forward to partnering with you to build a more sustainable food system.
